POETRY.

[Original.] LINES TO KATE. BY LILY MAY. There's many an earnest tale, Kate, That's told in simple rhyme; So open thine eyes and ears. Kate. And list while I tell mine.

Not that I've anything new, Kate, To mystify thy brain; But I'll give some precious hints, Kate, I need not give again.

One turn of the magic wand, Fats, Will waken mem'ry's powers; One glance at the shadowy past, Bring thoughts of joyous hours. Bright hours we've spent together, Kate,

That pe'er can come again;

Though the joys that we then tasted Were mingled oft with pant. For we learned 'mong many changes, To nobly bear a part;

And that there were more aches and pains, That those of head and heart. In the future let us strive, Kate, To battle for the right;

Regardless of the shalts thus sped. Our fundest hopes to blight. Though many do false words beguile To cheat us of a friend, Fear not, for innocent the while.

We'll conquer in the end. 'Mid the sweetest joys we borrow, How many ills are borne: Thus the darkest night of sorrow, Ends in the glorious morn. Pleasant Valley, Oa's Ja: 1855

The Frost Spirit.

BY J. C. WHITTHE He comes, he comes -- the Frost Spirit comes! You may trace his footsteps now, On the naked woods and blasted fields, And the brown hill's withered brow, He has smitten the leaves of the grey old trees, Where the pleasant dream came torth, And the winds that follow wherever he goes, Have shaken them down to the cart

He comes, he comes-the Frost Spirit comes! From the trozon Labrador; From the icy bridge of the northern seas, Where the white bear wanders o'er: Where the fisherman's sail is suif with ice, And the luckless form below, In the sunless cold of the atmosphere

Into the marble statutes grow! He comes, he comes—the Frost Spirit com is! And the quiet lakes shall feel The torpid touch of his glazing breath. And the ring of the skater's he: And the stream which done'd on the brok'n rocks, th sang to the leaning grass, Shall bow again to their winter clain, And in mournful silence pass.

He comes, he comes-the Frost Spirit comes! Let us meet him as we nuy, And turn with light of the parlor grate His evil power away; And gather closer the circle round, When the fire-light dances high, And laugh at the shrick of the baffled fiend, As his counding wings go by!

When he seated himself at the table, he could see their three heads peeping at him through a crack of the door.

"Here; you, Sal, Beck and Phebe" called the mother, "den't you go to make fools of yourselves. Come in and eat. He ain't going to hurt you."

But they were not to be persuaded. She next invited our triend, who being dressed in broadcloth, or "store clothes," she took for a minister, to say grace.

He rose gravely, and after a preliminary ahem, for the purpose of collecting his the'ts commenced:
